Death in the Desert

Lin "Spit" Newborn and Dan Shersty were good friends. They lived in Las Vegas and hung out together all the time. Newborn, 24, was black and worked in a local body-piercing shop. Shersty, 20, was white and was in the Air Force, servicing fighter planes at the nearby Nellis Air Force Base.

Both were skinheads. They shared a love of music and working-class culture. They also shared a passionate hatred of racism. Dan and Spit were members of the Unity Skins and leaders of the new Las Vegas chapter of Anti-Racist Action (ARA).

On Friday, July 3, two young women came into Spit's shop. One got a piercing and then they invited Newborn and Shersty to "a party" that night. "Spit and Dan were last seen when they left to go meet these girls," said one Ohio ARA activist. "Dan was found the next day right by his car in the desert, shot and beaten; and then Spit was found later, about 150 feet from the car, his body riddled with bullets."

Months later, Las Vegas police charged local neo-nazi John Edward Butler with the killings. Ballistics reports showed that Butler's gun was the murder weapon. Police have identified two other members of the racist scene who have not yet been charged.

Witnesses saw Butler and two others driving from the area of the murders. According to press reports, the witnesses wrote down a license plate number, and police traced it back to the family of Melissa Jane Hack, 22, of Las Vegas. Melissa Hack had recently been involved in another incident, a racist attack on a black family. The evidence suggests perhaps dozens of racists were present when the murders in the desert occurred.

These two young men will be missed. They were real leaders. Spit Newborn was the kind of guy who stood out. For a while he sang in a local band called Life of Lies. He was a little older than many of his friends and he had a two year-old son. "He came to our meetings and brought a lot of literature about the true history of skinheads," said a Las Vegas ARA member. "Spit was a super-nice kid," said Harry Fagel, a police officer who patrols the neighborhood where Newborn worked. "He was looked up to by the kids in the area. He espoused a viewpoint of nonviolence. He wasn't a pacifist, but he didn't go looking for trouble."

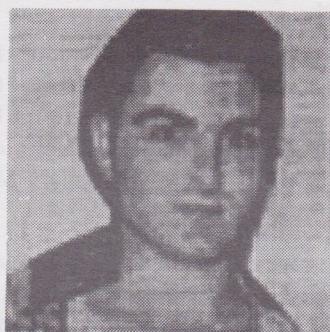

Dan Shersty was from Florida. He joined the Air Force to earn money for college, but he always wanted to be an actor. When his body was found, he had a tattoo of the masks of comedy and tragedy on his left shoulder. One mask was black and the other was white. Dan's father Walter Shersty knew his son wasn't racist: "He always had black friends and white friends and Puerto Rican friends. He was like us. He treated people the way he wanted to be treated."

Daniel played trumpet in the school marching band, and had one of the lead roles in his high school production of "Harvey." "As far as I'm concerned, Danny is a hero," his stepmother said. "He not only died for his country, he died for his friends."

Four hundred people attended Spit's funeral. Hundreds more came to Las Vegas for a memorial March against Racism on August 29 (See "Leaving Las Vegas," page 3). The Las Vegas ARA continues to organize.

A Trail of Tears

The murders of Spit and Dan were political assassinations, committed by members of the modern U.S. fascist movement. And what's worse, it was only one example of a trend.

The last half of 1998 brought one tragic story after another.

Just a few weeks before the Las Vegas murders, the world was stunned by a brutal racist killing in Jasper, Texas. James Byrd was walking home from a party for his niece, when he was picked up by three white guys. Before these racists chained Mr. Byrd to the back of their truck—a big, gray, rusted Ford—they drove up to an abandoned logging road and beat him. Then John King, one of the killers, said "we're starting The Turner Diaries early," referring to the Nazi novel about a race war, the same book that served as the blueprint for the Oklahoma City bombing.

The killers chained James Byrd to the back of the truck and dragged him at high speeds for nearly three miles through a black neighborhood. The three men arrested have been charged with murder. A cigarette lighter with a Ku Klux Klan symbol was found at the murder scene. Two of the suspects reportedly had Aryan Brotherhood tattoos, and had been monitored by officials while in prison for their association with the KKK.

After the Texas and Las Vegas incidents, the trail of tears moved north. David "Gypsy" Chain, an environmental activist protesting against the logging of old growth redwood trees in northern California, was crushed by a redwood being felled by loggers. Earth First! has a videotape in which the same loggers threatened activists just before Chain was killed.

On October 6, the horrible torture and murder of gay college student Matthew Shepard in Wyoming brought a new wave of outrage (See "Matthew Shepard, 1977-1998," pages 4-5).

Two weeks later, a sniper killed Dr. Barnett Slepian, 51, while he stood in his kitchen. Slepian's home and clinic have been targeted for protest since the 1980's by anti-abortion groups. Slepian's name was featured on an anti-gay/anti-abortion website (called the Nuremberg Files), which posts information on doctors who perform abortions. Dr. Slepian, widely respected for his OB/GYN work, is survived by his wife and four sons, ages 7 to 15. This was the fifth such attack on an abortion doctor on or around the Veteran's Day holiday in recent years. No suspects have been charged in this or any of the previous attacks.

As 1998 comes to an end, the question is not whether more hate murders will occur, it's when.

REAL ANSWERS

Of course, political officials expressed outrage at these various atrocities. Everyone from local mayors up to President Clinton made public statements condemning the killings. Then they filled the media with debates about whether more hate-crime laws should be passed or not.

But the whole debate over these statutes misses the point. The government cannot and will not find real solutions for the attitudes that lead to hate crimes. Passing one more law is not that important. There were already laws on the books against kidnapping and murder even before all the killings occurred. Those laws didn't stop any of these things from happening.

It's up to us to change things. We can't wait any longer for so-called leaders to do it. But what can we do to help get rid of this bigoted violence, and the backward ideas that lead to such crimes? The problems all seem so big and there don't seem to be any real leaders.

One thing is sure. We can't do it alone. We have to get organized into groups, get more people involved. We have to build a movement in every city, in every school, in every neighborhood. We need to learn to get along with people who are different from us, so that we can work together. Every project no matter how small will contribute to our overall success.

It's also our job to clear up the confusion that exists concerning the sources of organized hate in North America. There are specific people and groups doing all they can to increase the violence. The death of James Byrd, the Oklahoma City bombing and other atrocities can be laid directly on the doorstep of the nazi National Alliance in West Virginia, and its evil leader William Pierce. Pierce's Turner Diaries inspired those crimes, just as Pierce intended. Pierce continues to spread his poison. We should do something about the National Alliance.

What are you gonna do about it? Did it anger you when you heard about Matthew Shepard? When you read this article did you feel sad? What are you gonna do?

Get in touch with your local chapter of the Anti-Racist Action Network. If there's no group where you are, get some other people and start your own group. Get to work. Do it for James Byrd and Matthew Shepard. Do it for Spit and Dan. And for the new victims who have not yet been hurt—the new names we will all learn after it's too late to save them. Do something today before it's too late. What are you gonna do?

Mumia Needs Help Now

The life of Mumia Abu-Jamal is in grave danger. In the face of much evidence of his innocence, and a grossly unfair trial, the Pennsylvania Supreme Court unanimously ruled against all of Mumia's appeals. This sets the stage for Governor Ridge to sign a warrant for his execution, as he has already promised to do. Mumia issued a statement about the decision. He said "I am sorry that this court did not rule on the right side of history. But I am not surprised. Every time our nation has come to a fork in the road with regard to race, it has chosen to take the path of compromise and betrayal. On October 29, the Pennsylvania Supreme Court committed a collective crime: it damned due process, strangled the fair trial, and raped justice. I remain innocent. A court cannot make an innocent man guilty. The righteous fight for life, liberty and for justice can only continue."

GREENSBORO JUSTICE FUND

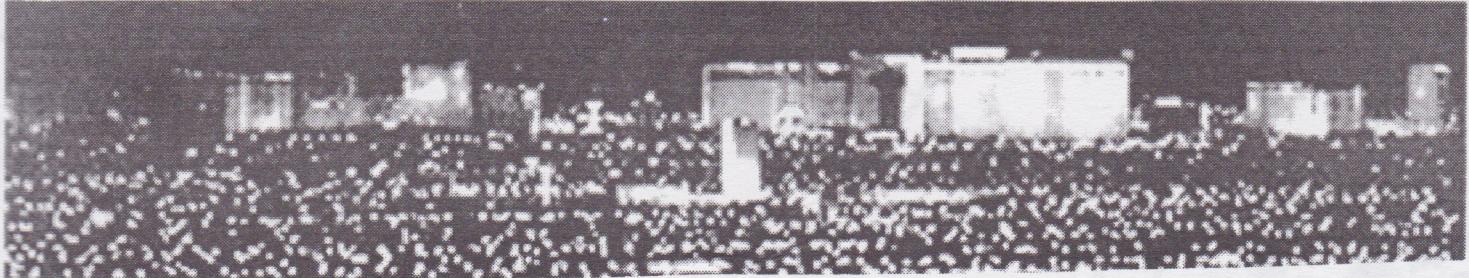

On a sunny Saturday morning in 1979, a multi-racial group of activists gathered at the Morningside Housing Complex in Greensboro, North Carolina. They were about to hold a rally and march against the KKK. A line of cars and pick-up trucks came down the street, full of racists from the KKK and nazi groups. In an attack planned and supported by government agents, the racists gunned down five leaders of the local movement.

Family and friends of the victims recently marked the 19th anniversary of the Greensboro Massacre. For the last two decades they have been building a movement in the South, through the Greensboro Justice Fund, to further the goals that their loved-ones died for. They have put into practice the advice of the revolutionary Mother Jones, "Don't mourn, organize."

The Fund has recently been helping to build local, interfaith religious committees that support low wage workers in their struggle for decent wages, benefits and working conditions. For example, in the Georgia Poultry Workers Justice Project, religious congregations have joined with poultry workers in a battle for the right to organize a union.

Get on their mailing list. Offer to help. Send them money!!! Greensboro Justice Fund, P.O. Box 4, Haydenville, MA 01039. And never forget Bill Sampson, Jim Waller, Sandi Smith, Cesar Cauce, and Mike Nathan—the people murdered by the racists in Greensboro.

Leaving Las Vegas

So, it's Sunday and I'm sitting in the open-air restaurant in the Las Vegas Airport. I'm in exactly the same spot where, just over a year ago, I sat with Julie, Jesse and Sheri, my daughter, son, and daughter-in-law. The very same table. It was here that Julie and Sheri went shopping for Beanie Babies. This is where I learned that "they've got some really rare ones, Dad" and "these are a good investment." Jesse and I smiled in befuddlement.

The last trip to Vegas was for fun, a family vacation. And we had fun. Saw Cirque du Soleil's "Mystere." Saw Penn & Teller. Roamed the strip enjoying the all-too-rare-these-days leisure company of my family. In a role reversal from the Las Vegas trips of earlier decades, the kids went out and gambled late at night, while dad watched a little TV and went to bed. That was last year.

But in 1998 I'm back in Las Vegas. Not to vacation but to support my brothers and sisters in Anti-Racist Action. Sitting in the restaurant, revisiting their splendid huevos rancheros, I consider the last three days. I met some new old friends, the ARA kids from Vegas. I spoke about ARA to media reps from CBS' 48 Hours and The New York Times.

We were the first story on the local news Friday night. I'm accustomed to being on television at home. But there I was, big as life, the opening voice on Channel 13, talking about ARA and the March against Racism planned for the next day. It occurs to me that thousands of people who live here are hearing about ARA for the first time at that moment. Not to mention thousands more, from all over the world, in their rooms at places like the Desert Inn and Caesar's Palace. If my dad were still alive, he would have liked that.

On Saturday we marched. I wasn't much help in the shit work of march preparation. I sat in my room most of the time, working on projects I had brought from home.

The tension increased all day Saturday as it got closer to 5:00. And then we were there. Representatives from ARA chapters as far away as Toronto, Detroit, Eugene. People representing lots of radical groups—Workers World, Radical Women, Campaign for Human Dignity, People Against Racist Terror, Refuse and Resist, Freedom Socialist Party, United Front Against Fascism, Anarchist Black Cross, and more—the "united front" walking down Flamingo Boulevard. Also some locals, Las Vegas residents who heard about the march and came out.

My waiter, a young handsome Hispanic-looking guy, is very efficient. I'm on my fourth cup of coffee, and the images from the march are rushing through my mind. Serious respect for our two lost brothers, Spit and Dan, comes from every group and every speaker. The march is spirited, comradely in a less self-conscious way than most radical left events I've seen. Afterwards, we gather for a while. A few beers and some pizza prepare us to watch ourselves on the news. We looked good. Cool banners, strong voices. We get props for having the march go off "without incident."

On my way to the airport this morning I grabbed the Las Vegas Review Journal. The march is on the front page of the local section. The headline reads "Rally Holds Anti-Hate Message." The coverage is positive. The last paragraph quotes a local ARA member.

"I think we made our mark today and showed this city we will not stand for racism," John said. "It is so sad that it took us two deaths to get to this point, but I'm sure they (Shersty and Newborn) are smiling wherever they are right now."

As I read this last sentence, I'm feeling emotional. I'm also wondering what good our march really did. Did we accomplish anything? Did this really make the movement stronger? Did we help the Las Vegas Chapter of ARA, or just put them in the spotlight for more violence after we're gone? Does anyone who watched us on the street or on TV really care?

"Wanna refill?" The waiter is back, coffee pot in hand, smiling.

"No thanks, I gotta catch my flight." I get up from the table, but he's still standing there. "So you were here for the thing, huh?" he asks, glancing down at my chest. I realize I'm wearing my black Anti-Racist Action T-shirt, and he's talking about the march. "Yeah, I was there," I answer.

He says, "We were talking about it at work. We didn't even know there was a group like that, you know, going against prejudice here in town. I was glad somebody was standing up, you know, doing something about it."

All I could think of to say was "Thanks, man." He reaches out his hand and we shake hands, smiling. "No, thank you, man. We're proud of you," he says. He's already taking an order at the next table as I walk away.

Wow. Maybe there is hope. We're building a movement against fascism, not a flash-in-the-pan media event. Movements are built slowly, over time, one brick at a time. How ironic. Things like being in the papers and on television let people hear about us, and we reach millions. And yet, my faith in our work was not restored by the guys from 48 Hours. It was a nice young man waiting tables at the airport who reminded me that we are much more important than we know right now.

I'm gonna wear that shirt more often.

Bob Jones University in South Carolina, the fundamentalist college previously found guilty of racial discrimination, is threatening to have gay alumni arrested if they set foot on campus. In an October letter, Dean of Students Jim Berg wrote to select alumni. With grief we must tell you that as long as you are living as a homosexual, you, of course, would not be welcome on our campus... Our greatest delight would be in your return to the Lord." The school also bans interracial dating.

19 states make it a crime for people to have consensual oral or anal sex, even if behind closed doors at home. On November 6, in Houston, deputy Sheriff responding to a false report of an intruder walked in on two men having sex in their home. Both were arrested for "homosexual conduct" and jailed.

Last February, Stockton (Mo.) High School band leader Marvin Manning arranged for the school band to perform at a Main Street parade at Walt Disney World. The trip was canceled after members of the anti-gay Westboro Baptist Church protested, saying Disney "condones homosexuality." The kids in the band, and many of their parents, were really pissed. "I thought it was a bunch of bull," said freshman flutist Danielle Dotson, who was near tears after the cancellation was announced.

denouncing the murder of homosexuals in such a way that it received even one-thousandth of the coverage his and his church's attacks on homosexuals routinely receive, this would be an act of decency the Pope can't afford, for the Pope knows: Behind this one murdered kid stand legions of kids whose lives are scarred by the bigotry this Pope defends as sanctioned by God. None of these kids will ever be allowed to marry the person she or he loves, not while the Pope and his church can prevent it; all of these kids are told, by the Holy Catholic Church, and by the Episcopalians and Lutherans and Baptists and Orthodox Jews: Your love is cursed by God. To speak out against murdering those who are discriminated against is to speak out against discrimination. To remain silent is to endorse murder.

Music for Matthew

When the story broke about the torture-murder of Wyoming college student Matthew Shepard, the song "Tony" immediately began to play in my mind.

"Tony," from the year's best and most underrated album Flaming Red by Patty Griffin, is about the kid who sat in front of Griffin in high school. A fat gay kid—nothing like Matthew Shepard who was handsome and seemed to like himself well enough. But as Griffin now recognizes, people have a lot of unsuspected things in common.

When Griffin finds out years later that Tony has committed suicide—"They wrote it in the local rag/Death comes to the local fag"—she knows that it's this false but all too tangible separation that drove him to it. "I guess you finally stopped believin' that any hope would ever find you/I knew that story, I was sitting right behind you."

Griffin is a social critic, peppering her new album with scathing criticisms of religion, particularly Catholicism. But she's not looking for sensationalized headlines. Tony and the Pope appear in her songs because they have a relationship to her biggest theme, which is searching for "One Big Love," to use the title of Flaming Red's other blockbuster tune.

That's why Patty Griffin reminds me of John Lennon. He had to surrender the notion that all we need is love, but refused to give up his belief that love heals. Both Lennon and Griffin blow right past stuff like "hate crime" laws. They're interested in something more important: Love as the antidote to hate, and to the loneliness and fear that generate it. Love, whose absence leaves all of us to bear some awful burdens.

In a song called "Goodbye," Griffin reacts to the death of a friend in a voice that's black and blue with ache. "I wonder where you are/And if the pain ends when you die," makes me think of Matthew Shepard. But then she adds words that better apply to the pathetic young men who killed him, and ruined their lives along with his: "Cause you can't make somebody see/With the simple words you say/All the beauty from within/Sometimes they just look away."

I don't know if Patty Griffin explains anything in those words. But that image of looking away-away from their victim's humanity, away from their own-offers a pretty good clue to what did and didn't go through the minds of Shepard's murderers.

One reason why I'm interested in politics but in love with music is that our great songs, and great songwriters, won't let us look away from such horrors even while they continually try to ease the pain of what we see. Right now, Patty Griffin sounds like someone with x-ray vision.

Who's Really Sick?

Full page ads ran recently in the New York Times, Washington Post, and USA Today, claiming that homosexuals can "overcome" their sexual identity and be "cured" by "accepting God." The ads were paid for by anonymous private donors and featured people who claimed to be ex-gays.

The growing prominence of the tiny "ex-gay" movement is the result of a shift in strategy by the Christian right. The claim that gay people can be "cured" is just the new packaging of an old bigoted message. In the face of growing public support for gay rights and an increasing distaste for hateful rhetoric, the anti-gay movement is hiding behind a mask of false compassion for "the poor queers." The goal is the same: to impose their rigid, puritanical views on the entire culture. And one of their beliefs is that gays, lesbians, bisexual people are "bad," not as good as "us," "immoral."

There's a terrific new 30 page report out on this topic. It's called Calculated Compassion: How the Ex-Gay Movement Serves the Right's Attack on Democracy. You can get it from Political Research Associates, 120 Beacon St., Somerville, MA 02143; publiceye@iqc.apc.org; <www.publiceye.org>.

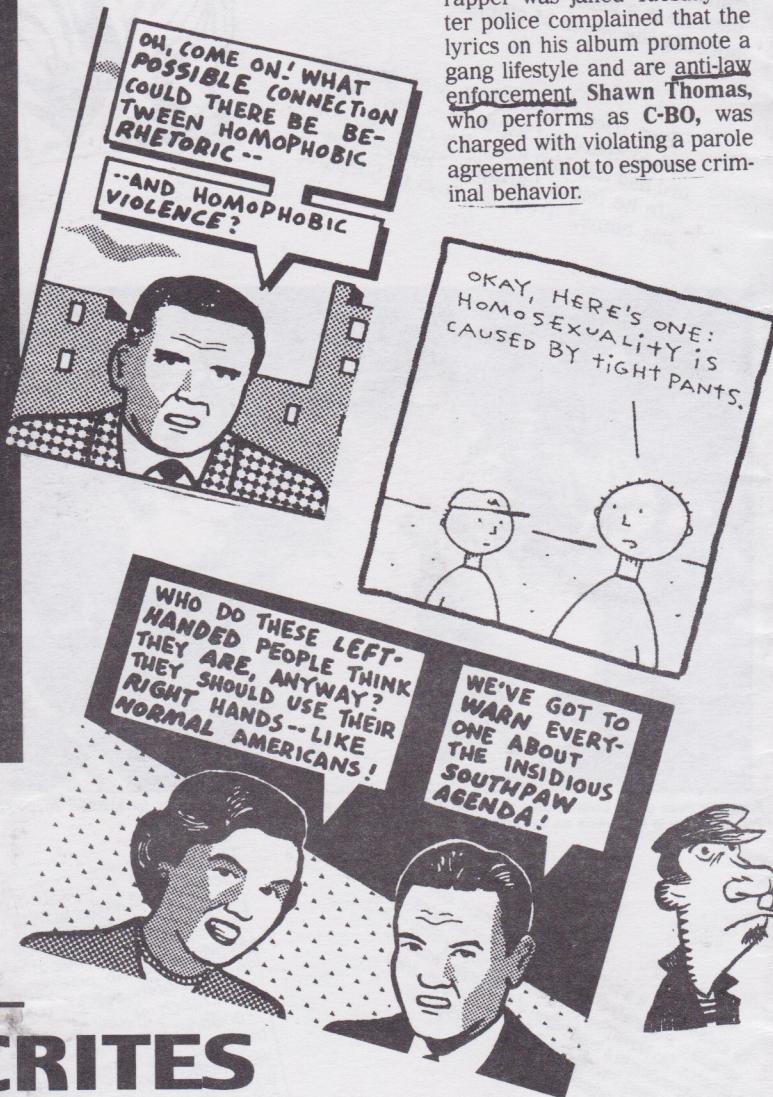

And remember: Homophobia is a certified mental illness. Gayness is not. The only "cure" for sexual orientation is ending prejudice.

A parental pamphlet on coping with marijuana use by kids, written by a Utah criminology professor and recommended by U.S. Sen. Orrin Hatch, identifies as a warning sign of dope use "excessive preoccupation with social issues, race relations, environmental issues, etc." (Also mentioned, according to an October Washington Post report, were more traditional telltale signs such as staying out all night, needing more money and showing interest "in Ras Tafari religion.")

A Sacramento "gangsta" rapper was jailed Tuesday after police complained that the lyrics on his album promote a gang lifestyle and are anti-law enforcement. Shawn Thomas, who performs as C-BO, was charged with violating a parole agreement not to espouse criminal behavior.

CULTURE HYPOCRITES

Here's a few things to think about when you hear people blame society's problems on rap, hardcore or heavy metal music.

1. In the 80's, Tipper Gore attacked rapper Ice-T for singing a song about pleasuring a young woman with a flashlight. In 1997, Bill Clinton actually pleasured a young female employee with a cigar. Tipper hasn't said a word about it, and her husband (vice president Al Gore) has applauded the "courage" of his boss. Where's your outrage, Tipper? Could you at least tell your husband to shut up?
2. Would-be censors are always trying to ban hip-hop and metal music because (they claim) it's a "bad" influence on the listeners. They point to some violence after a Public Enemy concert, or by some kid who listened to a Metallica record. This summer a Tennessee man, who smothered his baby daughter because she cried while he was watching a Garth Brooks concert on t.v., was given ten years in prison. So far, no one has recommended banning Garth Brooks or country music because of this crime.

3. A major figure of American popular music died this year. The press did not focus on his gang associates, his drug habits, the role of prostitution money in starting his career, his vicious anti-woman attitudes, or even the artistically lousy records he made at the end. Instead, the coverage was about the great music he made, the powerful effect it had on musical tastes, his innovations as a singer, his loyalty to his friends. Frank Sinatra deserved all that. He was a great singer. But to treat Snoop Doggy Dog and Tupac by different standards is racist and hypocritical. When Keith Richards of the Rolling Stones dies, I know his life will be seen in most obituaries through the lens of his addictions. And when James Brown, a titan whose achievements humble Sinatra, dies, the media will talk as much about his prison record as his mind-boggling contribution to music.

SO LET'S BE FAIR.

Walk together, rock together.

SKA Against Racism

Last year's "Ska Against Racism" tour was probably the largest, most successful explicitly anti-racist music tour in the history of North America. With great bands and a great vibe, we hit more than 35 cities, drawing over 1200 people a night. The tour included The Toasters, Less Than Jake, Five Iron Frenzy, Kemuri, the Blue Meanies, Reel Big Fish, MU330, Mustard Plug

What can ska music do to build the anti-racist movement? "I think that anything that makes you think about the issue of racism in America is worth doing," offers Rob "Bucket" Hingley of the Toasters. "Anything that makes people get off their ass is good. In a lot of places in the country, this tour is very controversial. And that's a shame, but it's reality." The crowds were mostly very young. And mostly white. Asked about this by New Music magazine, Mike Park explained. "It's wrong to say that because your crowd is mostly white you can't have a Ska Against Racism concert. It's getting the idea—against racism—out there. Having it on a flyer and on the radio just emphasizes the fact that we're against it. And ska music should be against racism." There were a few threats from nazi bonehead idiots to picket or disrupt one of the shows, but the whole tour went off without any such problems.

Thanks to the bands, the drivers, the crews, the people at the venues, "the road warrior" (Tad), Rick Bonde and the Tahoe Agency, Mike Park and Asian Man Records, and most importantly all of you anti-racist music fans. We can make a better world.

Radio Sucks!

SEIZE THE AIRWAVES

Turn on your radio. Go ahead. Spin the dial, run through station after station, and see if you find anything that's, well, different. It's not likely. Basically, radio sucks.

The "public airwaves" aren't very public anymore. They're the exclusive domain of wealthy corporations. They spew out the canned "news" and narrow music playlists of the radio billionaires. And the saddest part isn't the crap we hear. It's all the different, interesting stuff we don't hear. Think about how cool listening to the radio could be. Turning the dial could be a real adventure, but it's not. Fortunately, some people have jumped into this terrible, undemocratic vacuum.

Kind Radio

Mario Hernandez used to be just a college student in San Marcos, Texas. Now he's also a radio DJ. Last year Hernandez walked down the street with his mother to pick up a prize she'd won from a radio station operating out of a neighborhood house. Ten minutes later the 23 year-old Hernandez, without a single second of on-air experience, walked out of the house a disc jockey.

Today, Hernandez' two-hour show "The San Marcos Hip Hop Connection" airs every Tuesday night, serving a mostly young audience in this central Texas town of 30,000. He's on Kind Radio, one of over a thousand micro-radio stations across the country operating with very low frequency and serving very small listening areas. Kind Radio can be heard only in San Marcos.

The Micro Radio Movement has grown in the U.S. and all across the world as a grass roots response to corporate radio. These stations, most of them commercial-free, serve as platforms for views and music that are rarely allowed on the air by commercial stations. They are an antidote to a radio industry so consolidated that many smaller communities no longer have radio stations to serve their needs. In addition to Hernandez' show, Kind Radio offers local news and interviews with local officials, commentary from regular working people, a feminist report ("The Estrogen Hour of Power") and gay and lesbian programming. In all, about 75 people are involved in keeping the station on the air 24 hours a day. Granted, some of the programming is goofy

(a debate about whether hippies created the Beatles or the Beatles created hippies, for example) but that's not the point. The local community is being served.

Little Criminals

Predictably, the government has taken the side of the giant radio bullies. They have labeled Mario Hernandez and the others in the Micro Radio Movement as criminals. These radio police work for the Federal Communications Commission—the "FCC." Since 1979, the FCC has decreed that small radio stations are illegal. No station can get a license to operate at a broadcast power of less than 100 watts. The required testing, legal work and hardware expenses for a typical new radio station can be half a million dollars. Only the rich can play, says the FCC

What if there was a "Federal Newspaper Commission" that said in the name of efficiency, and to save paper and ink, only newspapers of 500,000 or more circulation would be legal? All homemade leaflets, rants, fanzines, church newsletters, school bulletins and local alternative papers would be banned. The Anti-Racist News would be illegal. That's the situation in radio broadcasting.

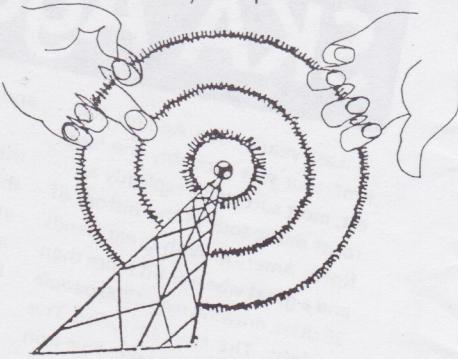

The FCC has abandoned any pretense that radio should serve the community. Rules were recently changed to allow corporate stations to set up their broadcast studios as far as 25 miles away from the city where they're licensed. Compare this to the neighborhood micro stations in Cleveland, which received overwhelming response when they broadcast 17 year-old Felix Feliciano's need for a bone marrow donor.

But the big boys wanna crush even the tiniest threats to their monopoly. Fifteen unlicensed radio stations in Miami were shut down by the FCC during the last week of July, just a few weeks after raids on Iowa City Free Radio, Radio Mutiny in Philadelphia, and a little station in Tioga, North Dakota.

Since the carnage in Miami, other victims have included Radio Free Ashville (N.C.), Radio Free Oxon Hill (in D.C.) and a loose network of five Spanish-language stations in Cleveland that used over 100 different DJs to broadcast around the clock. Since 1996, a total of 255 micro stations have been silenced by the FCC. Stations like Free Radio Berkeley and San Francisco Liberation Radio have gone off the air to avoid inevitable busts. And the feds defend their use of guns in these government raids.

Micro station operators have put forward very reasonable proposals to legalize low-power radio. The government has refused to consider any compromise

A Little History

Starting in the 80's with Mbanna Kantako, an unemployed black man living in a housing project in southern Illinois, the Micro Radio Movement has grown quickly in the U.S. The variety of these micro-stations is truly amazing. Every one is unique and serves its own local needs. For example, Korean communities in Washington and Oregon have responded to the absence of Korean language broadcasts by setting up their own non-licensed stations.

Since Free Radio Berkeley went on the air in 1993, there have been annual conferences of micro broadcasters, each one larger than the last. This summer, hundreds of so-called "pirate radio" broadcasters met in both Las Vegas and Philadelphia to build the movement. And the growth of democratic radio is not limited to the U.S., it's worldwide. There are thousands of low-power stations in Japan, where it's legal. Unlicensed radio is common throughout Mexico, and an important communications link for activists in places like Chiapas. In Brazil, about two-thirds of that country's 11,000 radio stations are unlicensed. In England, there have been 1250 government raids on pirate stations in the past 18 months.

At the same time that free radio has exploded, control of commercial radio has become tighter and tighter. In the past three years, radio has been transformed from a corporate mom-and-pop industry into one controlled by a few giants. In October, millionaire Sam Zell sold his Jacor Communications to Clear Channel Communications, Inc. for about $4.4 billion! This combination creates the second-largest radio group in the U.S., with 454 stations in 101 cities. In some places this conglomerate owns as many as eight different stations in the same city! In addition to radio stations, this company owns television stations, and the nation's biggest billboard advertising outfit. They also distribute right-wing buffoon Rush Limbaugh's show.

The rich are not in the radio business to serve the community. These giant broadcasting chains created by Bill Clinton's "Telecom law" are about profit, specifically advertising revenues. CBS Radio President Dan Mason recently predicted that the current average of 12 radio commercials per hour may soon jump to over 15 per hour.

Stations self-censor anything that might offend corporate interests. Beth Clements, morning drive-time host for KKFM/Colorado Springs, recently found out what happens when you threaten those ad dollars. Clements criticized Taco Bell's policy of charging extra to substitute beans for beef in their products. She said it was unfair to vegetarians. Taco Bell threatened to pull its ads from the station and Clements was fired.

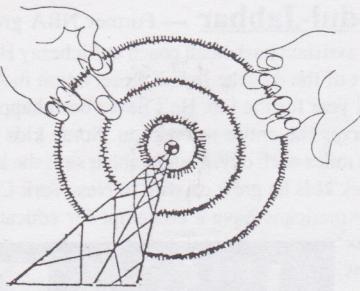

COURTHOUSE DEATH: A 19-year-old man distraught over a prison sentence offered in exchange for his guilty plea in a drug case jumped through a courthouse window and fell 16 stories to his death. "I'm 19 years old, your honor. That is terrible," Derrick Smith told State Supreme Court Justice Budd Goodman. Smith was charged with possession of marijuana and had been offered three to six years in prison. 10-30

■ HOUSTON 6 officers are fired after man is killed in botched drug raid

Six police officers were fired yesterday for their involvement in the fatal shooting of a man during a botched drug raid.

Pedro Oregon, 22, was shot to death July 12 after the officers, acting on an informant's tip, stormed his apartment in search of drugs. Police fired 33 bullets, hitting Oregon a dozen times, including nine times in the back.

No drugs were found in the apartment, and the officers later said they started firing because they thought Oregon had fired at them. Instead,

Back to San Marcos

This brings us back to Mario Hernandez and San Marcos, Texas. So far, Kind Radio is still on the air. Local bureaucrats have tried to shut it down, claiming a zoning violation because the station operates out of a garage in a residential neighborhood. But the station convinced a local jury that this was no more than a hobby, like a gardener who shares his bounty with his neighbors. The jury refused to shut it down.

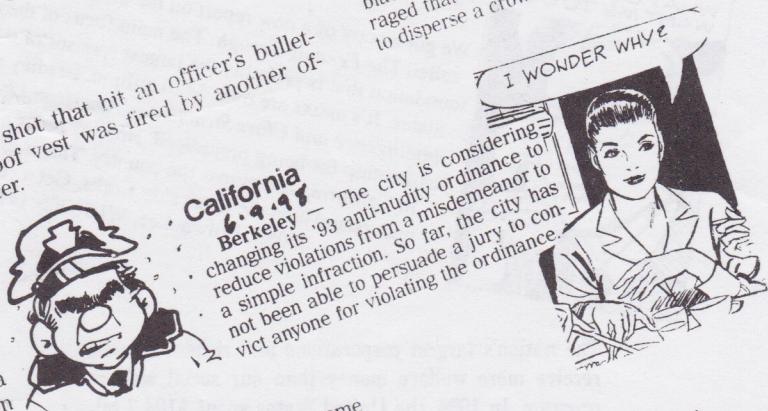

Three programmers from Kind Radio ran for office in the recent city elections. They all lost, but they threw the elections into a run-off. Two city council members and the mayor won seats after they came out in favor of the station. Kind Radio now has the support of the city in any future FCC battles.

This is a glimpse into the future. Enterprising voices of free expression will find ways to get on the air. These stations will be popular because they are made up of local people and they serve the needs of their communities. Those who enjoy these stations and benefit from them will fight to keep them. In the end, the government's expensive battle to silence micro radio is a battle it cannot win.

The Los Angeles Times reported, the Los Angeles prisoners have been shot to death and 32 wounded by guards armed with assault rifles since late '94, when the Department of Corrections first came under fire for deaths behind bars, the newspaper said. Lawsuits over the deaths have cost the state $6 million.

Bobby Rush — The former Black Panther leader is now a Congressman from Chicago. He has announced plans to run against Chicago Mayor Daley in the February ('99) election. Rush has attacked Daley for neglecting black residents and helping the rich downtown developers. He points out that poor and working people are being hurt by public transportation cutbacks, a poorly funded school system and chronic police brutality.

Abdul-Jabbar says the kids remind him of black kids he grew up with in New York City: "A lot of Native Americans have a contempt for education because it comes from the dominant culture and anyone seen embracing education is seen as selling out. That does not have to be the case. Knowledge is power. If you go to any barrio or inner-city ghetto or even Appalachia, you find some of the same problems that you find here—lack of economic opportunity, unemployment, poverty. They have very negative impacts on kids."

The victim, Rodney King, went into a long media seclusion. He recently emerged. Drawing from his $3.8 million settlement with the City of Los Angeles, he has launched his own music label. He's also taken up surfing and skiing, and continues to try and spread his message of unity among the races. And he continues to get hassled by the cops. He was stopped once while jogging, on suspicion of purse snatching. And at his first record release party, police helicopters hovered overhead, ordering people to "go home!" Its assets are over $420 million. Bradley money funded the racist book The Bell Curve: Intelligence and Class Structure in American Life, which once again argued the old intellectual justification for being prejudiced. Bradley money has fueled the anti-affirmative action campaigns in California and across the country. This is a really interesting report that helps us activists understand how the other side works. FASCISM Fascism, far from being an aberration of mass psychology, arose from the specific conditions of a social system in crisis. At first covertly, then increasingly in the open, layers of big business (like Volkswagen and I.G. Farben) financed and promoted the fascist movements in Italy and Germany. The same causes that drove Italian and German rich people to help bring fascism to power could produce the same effects in other places. It could happen here.

The nation's largest corporations and richest citizens receive more welfare money than our social welfare program. In 1994, the United States spent $104.3 billion on corporate welfare and $619 billion on the military, while spending only $14.4 billion on social welfare programs. Federal aid to corporations and wealthy individuals includes bailouts, export promotions, loans, loan guarantees, debt forgiveness, below cost sales, interest free financing and other benefits.

The government would like you to believe it is running out of money for social welfare and it "needs" to be cut. That just isn't true!

REAL HEROES: THE NIGHT OF BROKEN GLASS

On November 10, 1939, the Nazis destroyed or looted thousands of Jewish homes, synagogues and businesses in Austria and Germany. Hundreds of Jewish people were murdered. More than 20,000 Jews were seized and sent to concentration camps.

One American eyewitness reported that "Jewish dwellings were smashed into and the contents demolished or looted. In one of the Jewish sections, an eighteen year-old boy was hurled from a third story window to land with both legs broken on a street littered with burning beds and other household furniture. Jewish shop windows by the hundreds were systematically and wantonly smashed at a loss of several million marks.

This was executed by SS men and Storm Troopers, not in uniform, each astated. This seventeen year-old Jew.

REMEMBER KRISTALLNACHT.
NEVER AGAIN.

That night came to be known as Kristallnacht (the "Night of Broken Glass"). Recently, the 60th anniversary passed. This caused Harry Klein, a concentration camp survivor living in Ohio, to write a column reminding us of little known hero Herschel Grynszpan.

Living in Paris at the time of Kristallnacht, Herschel Grynszpan received news that his entire family back in Germany had been rounded up by the Nazis, beaten with whips and deported to Poland. He was deported to Poland. He was devished boy got a gun, walked into the German embassy in Paris and shot the first Nazi official he came upon. Arrested by the Paris police, Grynszpan said he had acted "because of love for my parents and for my people who were subjected unjustly to outrageous treatment. It is not, after all, a crime to be Jewish. I am not a dog. I have a right to live. My people have a right to live on this Earth." He continued to proudly assert his right to stand up to anti-semitism throughout the court proceedings in France.

It is believed he later died in a concentration camp.

Herschel Grynszpan is not famous. Neither are most of the people who have stood up to the fascists. But politicians, big shots—take credit for things, millions of regular people are the ones who actually change the world. Real heroes, like Herschel Grynszpan.

Workers' protest cripples Manhattan business, traffic

An unruly protest that pitted tens of thousands of construction workers against police in riot gear shut down midtown Manhattan Tuesday, crippling business and traffic for hours. Thirty-three people were arrested and 31 were injured, including 18 police officers, officials said.

The protesting workers, estimated at as many as to 30,000, were upset about the award of a $33 million transit contract to a nonunion company. A city transit spokesman said the law requires selection of the lowest bidder. But officials at the Construction Industry Partnership for the 21st Century, representing more than 100,000 workers and 1,000 contractors, said they would sue the Metropolitan Transportation Authority if the nonunion company is not removed.

NYC officer sues over suspension

A New York City police officer has sued the city after being suspended for appearing on a Labor Day parade float whose participants mockingly re-enacted a racist killing.

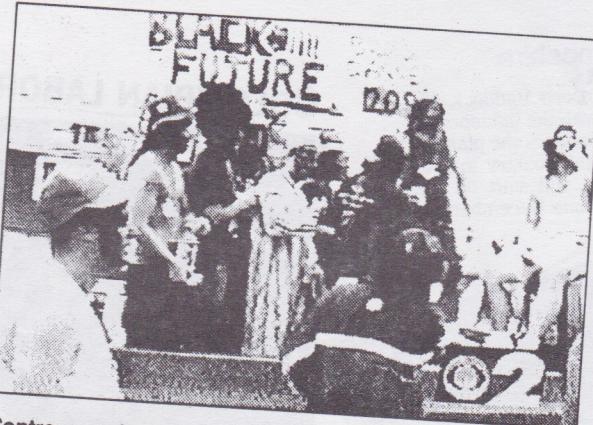

Joseph Locurto claims he was exercising his right to free speech by participating in the parade. About a dozen men wearing blackface makeup appeared on the float during the Sept. 7 parade in a predominantly white section of Queens. The float featured a banner reading, "Black to the Future 2098," and some participants performed a re-enactment of the June killing of a black man who was chained to a pickup in rural Texas and dragged to his death. Locurto, an officer since 1994, has apologized for his participation.

Float depicting black man's dragging death sparks furor

A New York City neighborhood whose Labor Day parades over the years included floats poking fun at Jews, gays and Asians has come under fire this time for a display lampooning the dragging death of a black man in Texas.

"I am disgusted by this ugly display of racism," said Mayor Rudy Giuliani, who has asked the city Human Rights Commission to investigate. He also ordered the city fire department to cut ties with the Broad Channel neighborhood's volunteer department, which sponsored the parade.

style and dreadlock wigs, riding on or marching alongside a green pickup truck. The float featured a banner reading, "Black to the Future 2098." One of the men clings to the rear bumper and is dragged slowly along the parade route, as if to mock the slaying earlier this year of James Byrd, 49, of Jasper, Texas.

In recent years, it has featured a float called "Hasidic Park" — a takeoff on the movie Jurassic Park — showing men dressed as Hasidic Jews. Another year, a float called "Happy Gays" featured men dressed as women flirting with each other. Another year, a float was called "Gooks of Hazelard."

Four men told WNYW-TV that they were responsible for the float but that they intended for it to be humorous and meant no harm.

"This float had no malicious intent at all," Teddy Rauert said. "We are extremely sorry, extremely, if we offended anybody." The volunteer fire department was not commenting on the controversial float.

Truth Panel Is Told of Bacterial Warfare

IT'S SO ORWELLIAN!

CAPE TOWN, South Africa—The former apartheid government investigated the possibility of developing a bacteria that would selectively kill or injure black people but leave white people unharmed, a scientist said. Addressing a hearing of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission, Daan Goosen described a search for an unnamed European scientist alleged to know about a bacteria that would harm only blacks.

The information came from the military attache at the South African Embassy in London in 1983 or 1984, Goosen said. His research led him to believe it could be a feasible project, Goosen said, but he backed out of a planned trip to London to find the scientist because he feared it could be a trap. He conducted the research on orders from Wouter Basson, an army physician who set up front companies to research biological and chemical weapons, said Goosen, who headed a covert military research lab under Basson's control.

Foes of the name say that could hurt students' college chances. The school will be about two-thirds white.

Kansas City — The University of Missouri has agreed to delay its plans to demolish more than 50 homes south of the campus to make way for a temporary parking lot. Residents criticized the plan, saying the area is a rare example of a stable multi-racial community.

An overdue honor

Baseball finally remembered Larry Doby Tuesday, belatedly electing him to its Hall of Fame — a curiously fitting tribute to one of the game's pioneers.

Doby was the first black player in the American League when the Cleveland Indians finally brought him up in 1947. Only weeks earlier, Jackie Robinson of the National League Brooklyn Dodgers had broken the color bar imposed when 19th century owners and players ran blacks out of the game.

Doby helped lead Cleveland to a World Series championship the next year, starred in the majors for 13 seasons, and later was a manager and executive — but was overlooked for the Hall of Fame until now.

His story, like Robinson's, was one of talent and character overcoming blind racism, North as well as South.

When he dropped out of Long Island University to fight for his country, he wasn't permitted to play for the camp team at Great Lakes Naval Training Station, where many current and future big leaguers were. He played for Camp Robert Smalls, a March 1957: Today, finally, Doby is in Hall of Fame.

When he joined Cleveland, most of his new teammates refused to shake his outstretched hand; some spat tobacco juice at him in the dugout.

For several years Doby, Robinson and a handful of others were the only black players in the hostile environment of white baseball. Three franchises — Boston, Detroit and Philadelphia — couldn't find their way to fielding a single black player for a decade or more.

It was 28 years — 1975 — before the first black manager was appointed. Baseball's front offices are still conspicuous for their lack of diversity.

That's the ongoing history of baseball, just as it is of other sports and society as a whole: real progress but often grudging and always slow.

In that sense, Doby's admission to the Hall of Fame is fitting in its very tardiness — a reminder to baseball and the nation not only of the giants who helped break out of a shameful past but also of the need to face up to a still-unequal present.

School fight centers on Confederate

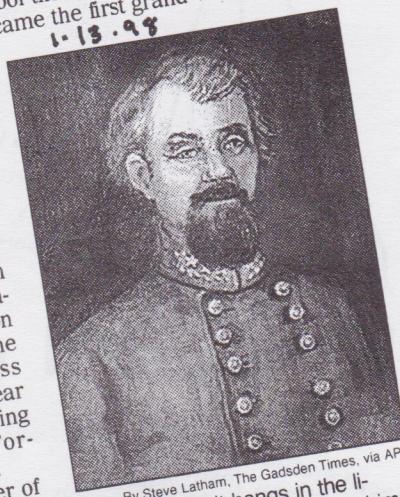

A black school board member in Gadsden, Ala., is campaigning to rename a school that bears the name of a Confederate general who became the first grand wizard of the Ku Klux Klan.

General Forrest Middle School is named for Nathan Bedford Forrest, widely credited with creating modern guerrilla warfare tactics. He is revered by many whites for his tenacious pursuit of Union forces throughout the South. Countless Southern males bear his name, including Alabama Gov. Forrest "Fob" James.

But his slaughter of captured soldiers, particularly black soldiers, was legendary.

Board member Roberta Watts describes Forrest as a slave-owning, uneducated Klan leader, and said she will ask the board next month to rename the school.

Longtime schools superintendent Fred Taylor says the name won't be changed. "He had a right to be in the organization as much as these (black) folks have a right to be in the NAACP," said Taylor, who is white. "That doesn't mean he wasn't a hero in the war."

KKK SHOOTING: A former Ku Klux Klan member in Columbia, S.C., received the maximum prison sentence of nearly 26 years for shooting three black teenagers outside a nightclub two years ago. Joshua England, 20, admitted firing 11 times into a crowd outside Club Illusion on Oct. 27, 1996. England had attended a Klan rally and drank. 9-30-98

KKK LEAFLETS: A militant wing of the Ku Klux Klan has begun wrapping leaflets around free local papers and delivering them door to door, publishers say. The leaflets have been distributed in California, Pennsylvania, Texas and North Carolina. The latest incident came this week in Santa Rosa, Calif., where the Classified Gazette was tossed on doorsteps, sheathed in an epithet-laced KKK leaflet vowing to "deport every African back to Africa where they belong." The KKK apparently took stacks of the paper from store racks, wrapped the leaflets around them and threw them into yards. San Francisco FBI spokesman George Grotz said that there is no clear violation of the law. 4-17-98

Man who killed hitchhiker in 1978 executed

A white man who strangled Betty carved "KKK" into her body 20 years ago was executed yesterday by lethal injection. John Arnold, 43, was convicted of killing Betty Gardner. Gardner, 33, was picked up by Arnold, his cousin John Plath and a female companion in 1978 as she made her way home. The companion, Cindy Sheets, led police to Gardner's body and testified against the cousins under a grant of immunity.

Dennis McGiffen faces up to 15 years in prison.

EAST ST. LOUIS — Former Ku Klux Klan grand wizard Dennis McGiffen faces up to 15 years in prison after pleading guilty in federal court here to firearms conspiracy and possession charges. McGiffen, 35, of Wood River, Illinois, and four other men were charged in March in an alleged plot to blow up the Southern Poverty Law Center and to assassinate its co-founder and chief trial counsel, Morris Dees.

McGiffen organized a group called the New Order to use machine guns and bombs in bank robberies to raise cash to finance a white supremacist reign of terror. Their plans included blowing up courthouses and poisoning city water supplies.

LINCOLN, NEB. Homecoming king candidate charged

A candidate for high-school homecoming king also is charged with disorderly conduct in a mob march that included yelling racial slurs and brandishing a Confederate flag toward the home of a racially mixed couple. Josh Smith, 17, was among a group that last month marched on the home of Les Blyden, who is black, and Jennifer Manire, who is white. Marchers carried bats, sticks, Confederate flags and at least one white cross. Authorities said the march was in reaction to a fight that occurred at the residence two nights earlier.

HAIGHT CRIME

NEARLY 30 YEARS ago it was a "Summer of Love" in the legendary Haight-Ashbury district of San Francisco. This year was a "summer of hate."

According to the San Francisco Bay View, at least 20 White males armed with chains, knives, bottles and skateboards attacked two Black couples and an infant on a neighborhood street earlier this summer. The Associated Press reports the Whites had been taunting the Blacks with racial slurs.

"Ten guys came after me...one of them had a knife and the other had a skateboard. The one with the knife hit me on top of the head with a chain and the other guy kept hitting me on my arm with the skateboard," says Victor Palmer, 19. One couple's baby was toppled out of her carriage, but was unharmed. Other victims were left with bruises and scrapes. A suspect who allegedly led the assault, Charles McDavid, 24, of Santa Cruz, has pleaded not guilty to five counts of assault, felony child abuse and hate crimes.

Desirée Butler and daughter Keianna were attacked in San Francisco's Haight-Ashbury district. Charles McDavid is charged.

GRAYS FERRY TRIAL:

The trial of nine white men accused of attacking a black family in a racially troubled Philadelphia neighborhood ended with convictions for six defendants. But Judge Albert Snite rejected convictions for six defendants. The men, all in their 20s and 30s, were part of a racial conspiracy in the working-class Grays Ferry section. Authorities said the men attacked Annette Williams, 34, and her teen-age son and nephew last Feb. 23, smashing the windows of their row house, kicking down the front door and shouting racial slurs. Three were convicted on felony charges, three more on simple-assault misdemeanors.

Miami — Nine Killian High School students were charged under Florida's hate-crimes law with publishing an underground booklet filled with racist and vulgar language and suggestions of violence against their black principal, Timothy Dawson. The group included five girls and four boys, most of them on the honor roll.

6. WHITE ARYAN LEGION MEMBERS ARRESTED: Two Kentucky white supremacists were arrested on weapons, intimidation and vandalism charges May 20. Charles E. Hall Jr., 28, and Daniel Koplitz are alleged to be members of an eastern Kentucky group called the White Aryan Legion. Hall is charged with discrimination, threatening communications and destruction of government property; while Koplitz faces charges for illegal possession of the components of a bomb.

The charges stem from a series of racist threats and assaults on buildings in the town of Langley, Kentucky. The group sent threatening letters to several white women who associated with black or Hispanic men, according to the FBI. One of the letters read, "We know who you are, slut!! Be warned! Clean up your act!... The Mexican you are with is not fit to raise your children." In another incident, members of the White Aryan Legion are alleged to have fired shots at buildings in the town of Langley, Kentucky. Police are investigating whether others were involved in the incidents. The two face up to 10 years in prison and $250,000 in fines if convicted.

Leaflets distributed by the two declared their mission to be "a Second Revolution which will restore complete authority into the hands of those people of European ancestry... The liberals and the Jews and the wealthy White traitors who run this society will not last forever. Our time will come." In his court appearance, Hall wore a T-shirt bearing a Nazi swastika and the words "Supreme White Power!" He is reported to have a shaved head and a tattoo saying "Aryan" on the back of his neck (Lexington Herald-Leader, May 20).

Increased FBI Surveillance

Since the Secretary of State issued the list of 30 designated "terrorist organizations" — out of which 17 are Arab and Muslim groups — surveillance by the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) has increased.

The FBI has an additional operating budget of over $400 million dollars to be used for surveillance against immigrant communities. Mosques will be particularly targeted. The FBI will make attempts to investigate and gather information on the lawful activities of members of the community.

Robertson: Gay Days to bring disaster

Some Orlando residents said they were unshaken by religious broadcaster Pat Robertson's warning that a gay tourism event might lead to natural disasters for the city.

An estimated 120,000 gay and lesbian tourists visited Orlando last weekend for Gay Days. Rainbow-colored gay pride flags were prominently displayed on city lampposts.

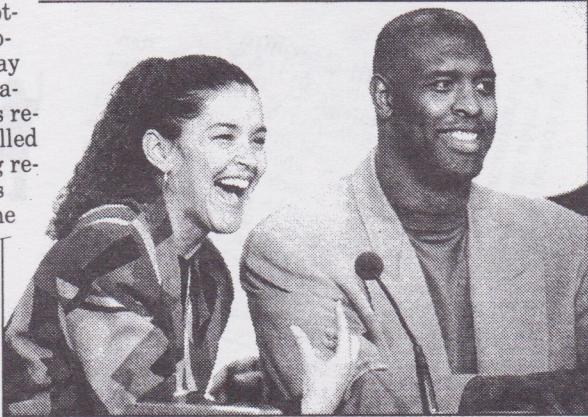

"I would warn Orlando that you're right in the way of some serious hurricanes and I don't think I'd be waving those flags in God's face if I were you," Robertson said this week on his TV show, The 700 Club. Robertson also predicted that tolerance of homosexuality "will bring terrorist bombs, it'll bring earthquakes, tornadoes and possibly a meteor."

Jim DeSimone, aide to Mayor Glenda Hood, said Robertson has "his right to have that opinion and we just hope he is wrong." Said local Baptist minister Randy Young: "Orlando is a pretty moral town. If God was going to hurl a meteor at someone, you'd think he'd start with Las Vegas."

Wife comes to White's defense

Sara White said CBS was "too scared" to hire her husband, Green Bay's Reggie White, as a football commentator because of his controversial speech before the Wisconsin State Assembly. White, the Packers defensive lineman who retired and unretired last week, used ethnic stereotypes and called homosexuality "one of the biggest sins" in the Bible in his remarks last month. "They were too scared of the Sodomite community is what they said," Sara White told ABC's 20/20, according to excerpts of the interview to be broadcast tonight at 9 ET. "Well, you know what? Shame on them! I feel sorry for them because they can't stand the truth." CBS had been talking to White about becoming an analyst, but the network said outside groups had no bearing on its decision to not hire him. White, an ordained Baptist minister, said he does not regret his speech. "My intent was not to humiliate anyone," White told ABC. "It was to get people to realize, 'OK ... we are different, we have different cultures. If we come together, we will have more of an impact on the world.' White said he stands by his remarks regarding gays. "I am going to speak the truth, and I am going to speak out against things that's hurting our children, that's killing off our people," he said. "If people think that's a contradiction and that's hate, they need to take them up with God, not with Reggie White."

MaryKait Durkee, 15, explains to reporters why she and the American Civil Liberties Union have sued for her right to sit quietly during the Pledge of Allegiance.

Teen takes fight against pledge to court

5.31.98
Girl fighting to quietly skip salute

SAN DIEGO (AP) — A high school sophomore who objects to reciting the Pledge of Allegiance is fighting for the right to sit quietly during the daily exercise.

"Until a few months ago, I stood and faced the flag with my hand over my heart and mechanically said the Pledge of Allegiance," MaryKait Durkee said Friday. "But I thought about what the pledge actually meant and I disagreed with its message."

She said she doesn't believe in God, thinks the U.S. government is corrupt and that American society is too violent, so she shouldn't have to show respect for a country that has so many problems.

After refusing to go along with the pledge, she was threatened with detention, although her mother told officials at Fallbrook Union High School the girl has parental permission to forgo the pledge.

As a result, the American Civil Liberties Union filed a federal lawsuit in behalf of the 15-year-old to protect her First Amendment free-speech rights.

It all started April 1, when the girl told her world history teacher, Lutz Zastrow, that she would sit quietly at her desk while the rest of the class stood for the pledge.

When the class finished, Zastrow ordered her to stand in front of the class and recite the pledge by herself. MaryKait refused,

School is ordered to accept student

Ruling in lawsuit favors 15-year-old with pierced tongue

DAYTON (AP) — A 15-year-old student suspended from school after wearing tongue jewelry will be allowed to return to classes following an order from a federal magistrate yesterday.

U.S. Magistrate Michael Merz issued a temporary restraining order barring Tecumseh High School in New Carlisle from keeping Michael Dyer Jr. from attending classes.

The action followed a federal lawsuit filed against the board of education Tuesday by Dyer's father, Michael Dyer Sr.

According to the lawsuit, the younger Dyer has been suspended from school four separate times totaling 25 days for failing to obey an order from a school administrator.

Dyer refused to open his mouth or to remove the jewelry pierced to his tongue, the lawsuit said.

It said Dyer uses body pierces, tattoos and unique hair styles to express his opposition to the use of drugs and in favor of original and creative thought.

The lawsuit said Dyers' constitutional rights to free expression and to be free from unreasonable searches were violated.

In his ruling, Merz wrote that Dyer's academic career could be hurt if he was not allowed to return to school pending a preliminary injunction hearing Feb. 17.

Merz said that if Dyer removes the jewelry before the hearing, the hole would start to close up and the tongue would have to be repierced.

"The court assumes that the pain of being pierced is not for Mr.

Dyer Jr. an enjoyable attraction of this particular fashion," Merz wrote. "Thus to deny temporary relief would be to impose a significant cost on him — the pain of repiercing — assuming the court were to decide this behavior is protected expression."

The school board said in a statement it would abide by Merz' order but feels there is a strong need for its rules against such jewelry.

The board has said its ban on body piercing other than earrings is needed because of concerns about health and safety, impact on ability to communicate and interference with the education process.

A message left for Dyer was not immediately returned.

raising her voice at Zastrow when he demanded her obedience.

The teacher threatened her with detention and sent her to the principal's office, the girl said.

The school, about 50 miles north of San Diego, contacted MaryKait's mother, who told officials she had given her daughter permission to not salute the flag.

"Hopefully, all people will realize that there is another way to express themselves if they want to express themselves, and that they can get support without resorting to drastic measures," Ann Durkee said, adding that she hoped a court victory might restore the girl's faith in the system.

The lawsuit seeks a ruling allowing her to sit quietly as others salute.

For the ensuing three weeks,

MaryKait sat silently in her seat during the pledge. On April 25, she was notified she had to serve four hours of detention and stand during the salute.

Fallbrook Union High School District superintendent Tom Anthony said it is important for students to show respect for the flag, but he was surprised the Durkees contacted the ACLU and thinks the dispute could have been resolved out of court.

The ACLU will seek a restraining order Tuesday, asking that MaryKait be allowed to forgo the pledge during the final two weeks of the school year while the case proceeds through court.

The girl, a self-described loner who wants to become a veterinarian, said she was simply following her beliefs.

Playful session: The Dalai Lama laughs after trying to pull off Bishop Desmond Tutu's hat Thursday in Charlottesville, Va.
By Bill Clark, The Daily Progress, via AP

Little Boys

Pace . . . comes within the souls of men when they realize their relationship, their oneness with the Universe and all its powers, and when they realize that at the center of the Universe dwells the Great Spirit, and that this center is really everywhere. It is within each of us.
